Arif believes the world is run by a single deity called the Unconquerable. He is told that if humans do not worship Unconquerable, they will face a galactic version of Armageddon. 2015 Ridley Scott sci-fi thriller "The Martian," $64.1 million Ridley Scott's ("Alien," "Thelma & Louise," "Black Hawk Down") speculative drama about a stranded astronaut (Matt Damon) stranded on Mars is a top-grossing global hit. Though it earned mixed reviews, the film has earned more than $284 million worldwide. "The Martian" may be a prequel to Scott's first "Alien" movie, but it is not a direct prequel to the director's most famous film, "Blade Runner." The production is an intergalactic affair that is part of Scott's "Film Socialism" movement that he espoused in the mid-1990s. The movement argues that the democratization of the movie industry can be achieved only through state control and funding of the film industry. "The Martian" stars Matt Damon as Mark Watney, an astronaut, who is presumed dead after he is left behind on the planet Mars. Due to the distance between Mars and Earth, there is only one way to contact Watney, and that is through a satellite orbiting the planet. After NASA engineer/biologist Dr. Habibi (Warner Bros.' Matt Damon) embarks on a mission to repair the satellite and bring Watney home, he discovers that Watney is still alive and has the necessary survival supplies to live for years on Mars. The film is the first big hit in theaters this year, on its way to a $200 million domestic total. Its international take is $182 million, to date, according to box office tracker website Box Office Mojo. The film, directed by Scott, grossed a total of $400 million worldwide. Most of its total came from the U.S. and Canada. The film earned $44.1 million in the U.S. and $54.1 million in the rest of the world, which includes China. Scott and Damon have teamed before on "Gladiator," which grossed $370 million worldwide. "Jason Bourne," which opened on June 29, is expected to make $90 million domestically. Matt Damon is one of the most bankable stars in Hollywood, with "The Bourne Identity" ($478.5 million) and 82157476af
